For example, it may be required to distinguish between different types of objects that are intended to be shipped to a user. It may also be desirable to detect whether two items are similar. For example, it may be required to distinguish between two objects that are intended to be used together, even when the objects are similar in many other respects. Such products may include, for example, smart power products, such as a power bank and charging device, intended to be charged simultaneously by an electronic device that requires relatively high charging power, or by a battery charger that charges an electronic device that can supply the electronic device with charging power. In other applications, it may be desirable to distinguish between two objects that are intended to be shipped to one customer, while being incapable of distinguishing the objects when shipped to one other customer./* * Copyright (c) 2010-2012 LinkedIn, Inc * * Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); you may not * use this file except in compliance with the License.
