Field of the Invention This invention relates to a separator for removing liquid and solid particles of pulp, froth and similar substances and to methods of and apparatuses for such removal. B. Prior Art In the prior art, a separator of this kind is well known. However, the conventional separator has various disadvantages such as long periods of time necessary to remove the particles from the pulp by gravity, pollution of the machine and work tools due to the fact that they usually contain copper or aluminum to which the particles will stick, and poor separation of liquid and solids in the bottom of the separating tank. Attempts to overcome these disadvantages have resulted in complex structures with counterflow rather than cross-flow as suggested by the Japanese Patent Application No. 855/74. The same idea was taken up by the Czechoslovakian Patent Application No. 138/75 and U.S. Pat. No. 4,016,826, which describes a continuous counterflow separator. The known design has as the main drawback the fact that it requires the two separate horizontal screens, the so-called separating or screen-cleaning screens, which occupy a substantial amount of space, with the result that the return line must also be very long to reach the surface of the soil. It is an object of the present invention to provide a separator which overcomes the drawbacks 6d1f23a050
